“I don’t think you can handle this.”

Working the capacity objection — what I’d actually say, and what I’d hand a rep so they can say it too.

THE OBJECTION

It never arrives as a question about trucks.

“Look — I’m sure you’re good at what you do. But this isn’t a load. This is a build. I don’t think you can handle it.”

— every serious shipper, about four minutes into the first real meeting

WHAT THEY SAID

That they doubt our equipment. That’s the surface, and it’s the part most reps answer. They answer it with a list.

A list loses. Everyone has a list, every list says the same words, and the customer has read four of them this month.

WHAT THEY MEANT

“The last one of you cost me a date.”

They have been let down by somebody who said yes to all of it and could only actually do the easy third. They are not insulting us. They are protecting themselves, and they are right to.

So I don’t argue with the objection. I agree with it out loud, and then I make it specific enough to answer.

One project is not one kind of freight.

I put their own build on the table before I put us on it. Nothing here is news to the customer — that's the point. They watch me know it, and the conversation changes.

PHASE	WHAT MOVES	WHAT IT TAKES
Long-lead electrical	Generators, transformers, switchgear, busway	HEAVY HAUL · PERMITS · ESCORTS
Mechanical	Chillers, CRAH units, cooling skids, piping	OVERSIZE · STEP DECK · RGN
Shell & site	Steel, precast, conduit, gravel, gen pads	FLATBED · VOLUME · REPEAT
White glove	Racks, cabinets, network gear, spares	AIR RIDE · LIFTGATE · INSIDE
Punch list	The forty small things nobody scheduled	LTL · PARTIAL · VAN
The bad phone call	Something failed and commissioning is Friday	EXPEDITE · TEAM · AIR

That is six different carriers under most programs — six sets of paperwork, six people to call at 6 a.m., and not one of them owns your date.

Range, proven at both ends. One network. One agent.

THE FLOOR

One pallet.

A single skid of spares, moved today, billed on the same agreement as everything else on the site.

THE CEILING

A wind turbine blade.

Routed, permitted, escorted, and delivered on a date somebody stood behind in writing.

Every phase on the previous page rides the same network, the same contract, the same agent. That is not a longer list of trucks — it is a network arranged so the service still makes sense when the project stops going to plan.

EVERY MODE, ONE AGREEMENT

Van, flatbed, step deck, double drop, RGN, heavy haul, expedite, air. The customer signs once and never renegotiates because the freight changed shape mid-project.

CAPACITY THAT CHOSE THE LOAD

BCOs own their trucks and pick their own freight. The driver who takes an oversize move wanted it — he has the trailer, the permits behind him, and the miles doing exactly that.

LOCAL PEOPLE AT BOTH ENDS

An independent agent at origin and an independent agent at destination, working the same load in the same system.
Somebody is near the plant and somebody is near the site.

SOURCED AROUND THE CLOCK

Capacity is not a desk that closes at five. A truck that breaks down at eleven at night gets re-covered at eleven at night, because the network is awake in every time zone.

WHAT WE'RE ACTUALLY SELLING

They are not buying trucks. They are buying the date.

Capacity is only interesting on the worst day of the project. So that is the day I sell to.

WHEN SOMETHING BREAKS

A tractor goes down two states out with their switchgear on the trailer. On a single-carrier program that is a conversation about fault.

On this network it is a conversation about which truck is closest. The trailer stays loaded, the load keeps moving, and the customer finds out afterward — from me, with the new ETA already attached.

WHY THAT'S STRUCTURAL, NOT LUCK

Independent capacity across the map means re-sourcing is a normal Tuesday, not an escalation.

And there is one agent accountable end to end. Nobody gets to hand the problem sideways, because there is no sideways — it is my name on every phase of their build.

Close: “You don’t need me to promise nothing goes wrong. You need to know what happens when it does. Let me walk you through the last time it did.”

What I'd hand a rep on their first Monday.

A rep who has never moved a generator will freeze on this objection and retreat to price. The fix isn't more product training. It's giving them something true to say and the proof to say it with.

01 The phase map, on one page

Slide 3, laminated. They don't memorize equipment specs — they learn to ask which phase the customer is standing in. That question alone makes them sound like the fourth-best-informed person in the room, which is enough.

02 Three stories, not three brochures

One recovery, one oversize, one impossible date we hit. Real lanes, real names where we're allowed to use them. A rep can carry a story into a meeting. Nobody carries a spec sheet.

03 A number they never have to guess

Mine. On an oversize or heavy-haul question they are allowed to say "let me get my agent on this" without it costing them status — because I'll answer while they're still in the parking lot.

04 A weekly report that runs itself

Quotes out, loads booked, what stalled and why. The stalls are the coaching. Pipeline I can read in ninety seconds means the rep gets help on Tuesday instead of a lecture at quarter end.

05 The presentation, built for them

This deck, rebuilt per account with that customer's own project on page three. It took me an evening. It scales to every rep on the floor and it is the difference between showing up to a meeting and showing up prepared.
